MEMORANDUM

TO: Elizabeth Rink, PhD. MSW

FROM: Robert McAnally —
Chair, Institutional Review Board for the Protection of Human Subjects

DATE: October 26, 2018

SUBJECT: Nen UnkUmbi/EdaHiYedo ("We Are Here Now")

The above proposal was reviewed on October 4, 2018 by the Fort Peck Tribal Institutional Review Board. This proposal is now approved for a period of one-year.

Please keep track of the number of subjects who participate in the study and of any unexpected or adverse consequences of the research. If there are any adverse consequences, please report them to the committee as soon as possible. If there are serious adverse consequences, please suspend the research until the situation has been reviewed by the Institutional Review Board.

Any changes in the human subjects' aspects of the research should be approved by the committee before they are implemented.

It is the investigator's responsibility to inform subjects about the risks and benefits of the research. Although the subject's signing of the consent form, documents this process, you, as the investigator should be sure that the subject understands it. Please remember that subjects should receive a copy of the consent form and that you should keep a signed copy for your records.

In one year, you will be sent a questionnaire asking for information about the progress of the research. The information that you provide will be used to determine whether the committee will give continuing approval for another year. If the research is still in progress in 5 years, a complete new application will be required.

The Fort Peck IRB requests that when you have a manuscript, thesis, or presentation prepared for public consumption, that you provide the Fort Peck IRB with an opportunity to review the document prior to publication and to make recommendations to ensure that the document appropriately respects the Fort Peck peoples.

Nen OnkUmbi/EdaHiYedo ("We Are Here Now")

Informed Consent to Participate in Human Subjects Research with Montana State University in Partnership with Fort Peck Community College

What is this project about?

We Are Here Now is an intervention project with Fort Peck Community College and Montana State University. The purpose of this intervention is to teach youth at Fort Peck important things they need to know about sex so that they can stay healthy and not get a sexually transmitted disease, HIV, or Hepatitis C, and so that they can make healthy decisions about having children, getting pregnant, or getting someone pregnant. We Are Here Now teaches parents about how to speak with their child about sensitive topics related to sex. We Are Here Now also teaches Assiniboine and Sioux youth about their culture and traditional beliefs and practices about what it means to be a young Native person who will soon be an adult.

Why me?

You have been selected to participate in this focus group because you participated in We Are Here Now. You may choose to participate or not participate in this focus group at any time.

What happens to me if I decide to participate?

If you decide to be in this focus group we will be asking you questions about what you liked and did not like about We Are Here Now. The focus group will be about 1 hour. We will ask you questions about what you thought was good about We Are Here Now and what you did not like so much. We will also ask you what you think we need to change to make the program better the next time we do the program here at Fort Peck. We will record the focus group and we will not keep track of who is saying what. This means that nothing you say will be associated with you. Your responses are anonymous. If you agree to participate in this focus group, you will receive a $10 gift card that you can use here at Fort Peck.

What are the risks?

There may be very minimal risks to participating in the focus group. We are going to ask you questions about what you liked and did not like about We Are Here Now. Maybe you might feel uncomfortable sharing with us what you thought about the program. That is okay. It is important that we hear from you about what you liked and did not like about We Are Here Now so that we can make it better the next time we implement the program here. If there is something you would really like us to know and do not feel comfortable talking about it in the focus group you can contact Paula Firemoon at Fort Peck Community College and speak with her.

What are the benefits?

The information gathered in this focus group will help the We Are Here Now's research team and members of the Fort Peck community to understand how to make this program better for young people on the reservation.

Who gets access to information from this interview?

The research team has access to the data collected for this project. The We Are Here Now community advisory board will also have access to the data collected for this intervention. All responses in this focus group are confidential amongst the other people in the focus group. It is important that what we say in the focus group stays here. So that we respect what everyone has to say. In the transcripts created from the focus group recording none of the responses will be associated with your name. This means that your responses in the focus group transcripts are anonymous. Neither the research team nor the community advisory board will know who you are in the focus group transcripts.

How am I informed about the results of the project, and when will they be released and presented to someone else?

We will publish the intervention results and make presentations on the results from We Are Here Now. Your identity will never appear in a publication or in print or be discussed at a presentation. In addition, you will have the opportunity to learn about the intervention results by contacting members of the research team, attending community meetings where we share the results of the project, and through local (Fort Peck Reservation) media.

Waiver of Consent to Participate in Human Subjects Research with Montana State University in Partnership with Fort Peck Community College

We Are Here Now is an intervention project with Fort Peck Community College and Montana State University. NenUnkUmbi/EdaHiYedo* ("We are Here Now," or NIE) derives from the Assiniboiné (NenUnkUmbi) and Sioux (EdaHiYedo) names for their traditional coming-of-age ceremonies. The purpose of this program is to teach youth at Fort Peck important things they need to know about sex so that they can stay healthy and not get a sexually transmitted disease, HIV, or Hepatitis C, and so that they can make healthy decisions about having children, getting pregnant, or getting someone pregnant. We Are Here Now also includes tribal elders and leaders teaching Assiniboiné and Sioux youth about their culture and traditional beliefs and practices about what it means to be a young Native person who will soon be an adult. In addition to working with youth, We Are Here Now also is offering education to parents/legal guardians about how to speak with their children about sensitive topics related to sex.

As part of N/E will be working with the Fort Peck Epi Team to evaluate the reproductive health services available to youth on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. Members of the Montana State University and Fort Peck based research team will be attending Epi team meetings to assess the reproductive health services available for youth on the reservation. These meetings will include discussions of the barriers and facilitators of reproductive health and tracking any changes that the agency you work for makes as result of our discussions. The Montana State University and Fort Peck based research team will provide regular feedback to the Epi Team of the monitoring we are conducting related to the barriers and facilitators of reproductive health services for tribal youth.

Our discussions will be audiotaped and transcribed in order to conduct content analysis of the primary themes that emerge related to the barriers and facilitators of our discussions. There is no risk associated with your involvement in the discussions; and there is no cost or compensation to you for participation in our discussions.

Informed Consent to Participate in Human Subjects Research with Montana State University in Partnership with Fort Peck Community College

What is this project about?

We Are Here Now is an intervention project with Fort Peck Community College and Montana State University. The purpose of this intervention is to teach youth at Fort Peck important things they need to know about sex so that they can stay healthy and not get a sexually transmitted disease, HIV, or Hepatitis C, and so that they can make healthy decisions about having children, getting pregnant, or getting someone pregnant. We Are Here Now also teaches Assiniboine and Sioux youth about their culture and traditional beliefs and practices about what it means to be a young Native person who will soon be an adult.

Why me?

You have been selected to participate in We Are Here Now because you are a young person at Fort Peck. You may choose to participate or not participate at any time.

What happens to me if I decide to participate?

If you decide to be in We Are Here Now, you will participate in a survey that will take 50 to 60 minutes. You will be asked to complete this survey three more times during the next year so that we can keep track of any changes you may have in your beliefs and behaviors as a result of participating in We Are Here Now. You will be asked several questions about different topics related to sex, having children, and sexually transmitted diseases in order to learn about what you think about having children and what you know about sexually transmitted diseases. You will also be asked questions about your sexual behavior and experiences with drugs and alcohol. You will also be asked questions about your feelings and emotions and your traditional culture. It is important that you know that all of your responses on this survey are anonymous. This means that no one will know that it is you who answered these questions. Your responses will be kept track of in the computer that you are taking the survey on. Your name will be nowhere in the computer or on the survey. There is no cost to you if you agree to participate in this study. If you agree to participate in this survey, you will receive a $10 gift card that you can use here at Fort Peck. Also by agreeing to participate in We Are Here Now, your parent/legal guardian is agreeing to participate in an educational program called Native Voices, and you are agreeing to be part of a cultural mentoring program with the Fort Peck Tribes' Language and Culture Department.

What are the risks?

There may be minor risks to agreeing to participate in the survey. Some of the questions may make you feel uncomfortable, sad, or confused. You may choose to stop the survey at any time or decline to answer a particular question. The questions will be about your life experiences as they relate to sex, drug and alcohol use, having children, sexually transmitted diseases, your feelings and emotions, and your understanding of your traditional culture. A list of resources are provided in this consent form if you feel that you would like to speak with someone further about your life experiences. None of the things that you say on the survey will be connected to your name.

What are the benefits?

The information gathered in this survey will help the intervention's research team and members of the Fort Peck community to understand what kind of impact your participation in We Are Here Now is having on your decisions to avoid getting a sexually transmitted disease and your decisions about having children when you feel you are ready. We would also like you to know that if you tell us about any abusive situation you are experiencing or have experienced, we will need to report that to the appropriate services here at Fort Peck so that you can receive assistance.

Who gets access to information from this interview?

All responses on this survey will be confidential. Only one person, Paula FireMoon, will know that you participated. Your personal information such as your name, telephone number and address will be linked to a study identification number to track your participation in the study. Your personal information will only be kept in order to contact you to participate in the follow up data collection for this study. Your personal information will be kept in a locked file cabinet at the Fort Peck Community College Institutional Review Board administration office in Poplar. Neither Paula nor the rest of the research team, nor the community advisory board, will know what your individual responses to the survey are. The data collected in this study will not be associated with your name. The research team and the community advisory board will have access to the data collected for this project with no identifying information on it that can be associated with your name.

How am I informed about the results of the project, and when will they be released and presented to someone else?

We will publish the intervention results and make presentations on the results from We Are Here Now. Your identity will never appear in a publication or in print or be discussed at a presentation. In addition, you will have the opportunity to learn about the intervention results by contacting members of the research team, attending community meetings where we share the results of the project, and through local (Fort Peck Reservation) media.

NenUnkUmbi/EdaHiYedo* ("We Are Here Now")

Informed Consent to Participate in Human Subjects Research with Montana State University in Partnership with Fort Peck Community College

What is this project about?

We Are Here Now is an intervention project with Fort Peck Community College and Montana State University. NenUnkUmbi/EdaHiYedo* ("We are Here Now," or NIE) derives from the Assiniboine (NenUnkUmb1) and Sioux (EdaHiYedo) names for their traditional coming-of-age ceremonies. The purpose of this program is to teach youth at Fort Peck important things they need to know about sex so that they can stay healthy and not get a sexually transmitted disease, HIV, or Hepatitis C, and so that they can make healthy decisions about having children, getting pregnant, or getting someone pregnant. We Are Here Now also includes tribal elders and leaders teaching Assiniboine and Sioux youth about their culture and traditional beliefs and practices about what it means to be a young Native person who will soon be an adult. In addition to working with youth, We Are Here Now also is offering education to parents/legal guardians about how to speak with their children about sensitive topics related to sex.

Why me?

You and your child have been invited to participate in We Are Here Now and to help gather information about the program and its effects. Your participation in this intervention is entirely voluntary. You can choose not to participate at any time. You and your child may withdraw from the intervention at any time without negative consequences. Your participation in We Are Here Now is your choice.

What happens to me if I decide to participate?

If you agree to participate in We Are Here Now, you will be with other guardians or parents of young people who are participating in We Are Here Now, and you will learn about how to talk with your child about sex. We Are Here Now is a project that educates youth and their guardians/parents about sexual and reproductive health. As a participant in We Are Here Now, you will be talking with other guardians/parents about healthy sexual behaviors and about how to talk with your children about sex. You will be asked to complete a survey specifically for guardians/parents about how you talk to your child about sex and what kinds of things about sex you speak with them about. There is no cost to you if you agree to participate in this study. You will receive an incentive of $20 for this first survey, and then $10 each time you attend the four Native Voices sessions (at 2 of these sessions you will again fill out the survey). Finally, you will receive a $25 incentive for completing the final survey after the end of the program.

What are the risks?

Some of the questions may make you feel a bit uncomfortable. For example, we will ask you about what kinds of sexual topics you talk about with your child. A list of community resources is provided with this informed consent if you feel you would like to speak with someone further about feelings that may have been brought up as a result of your participation in this study.

What are the benefits?

Through this program you will learn about ways to speak effectively with your child about sex and topics related to sexual health. The information gathered in this survey will help the intervention's research team and members of the Fort Peck community to understand what kind of impact your participation in We Are Here Now is having on your decisions to talk with your child about sensitive topics related to sex.

What is this project about?

We Are Here Now is an intervention project with Fort Peck Community College and Montana State University. NenUnkUmbi/EdaHiYedo* ("We are Here Now," or NIE) derives from the Assiniboiné (NenUnkUmbi) and Sioux (EdaHiYedo) names for their traditional coming-of-age ceremonies. The purpose of this program is to teach youth at Fort Peck important things they need to know about sex so that they can stay healthy and not get a sexually transmitted disease, HIV, or Hepatitis C, and so that they can make healthy decisions about having children, getting pregnant, or getting someone pregnant. We Are Here Now also includes tribal elders and leaders teaching Assiniboiné and Sioux youth about their culture and traditional beliefs and practices about what it means to be a young Native person who will soon be an adult. In addition to working with youth, We Are Here Now also is offering education to parents/legal guardians about how to speak with their children about sensitive topics related to sex.

Why me?

You and your child have been invited to participate in We Are Here Now and to help gather information about the program and its effects. Your participation in this intervention is entirely voluntary. You can choose not to participate at any time. You and your child may withdraw from the intervention at any time without negative consequences. Your participation in We Are Here Now is your choice.

What happens to me if I decide to participate?

If you agree to participate in We Are Here Now, you will be with other guardians or parents of young people who are participating in We Are Here Now, and you will learn about how to talk with your child about sex. We Are Here Now is a project that educates youth and their guardians/parents about sexual and reproductive health. As a participant in We Are Here Now, you will be talking with other guardians/parents about healthy sexual behaviors and about how to talk with your children about sex. You will be asked to complete a survey specifically for guardians/parents about how you talk to your child about sex and what kinds of things about sex you speak with them about. There is no cost to you if you agree to participate in this study. You will receive an incentive of $20 each time you attend the four Native Voices sessions. At 2 of these sessions you will fill out a survey. You will also receive a $25 incentive for completing the final survey three months after finishing Native Voices.

What are the risks?

Some of the questions may make you feel a bit uncomfortable. For example, we will ask you about what kinds of sexual topics you talk about with your child.

What are the benefits?

Through this program you will learn about ways to speak effectively with your child about sex and topics related to sexual health. The information gathered in this survey will help the intervention's research team and members of the Fort Peck community to understand what kind of impact your participation in We Are Here Now is having on your decisions to talk with your child about sensitive topics related to sex.

Who gets access to information from this interview?

All responses on this survey will be confidential. Only one person, Paula FireMoon, will know that you participated. Your personal information such as your name, telephone number and address will be linked to a study identification number to track your participation in the study. Your personal information will only be kept in order to contact you to participate in the follow up data collection for this study. Your personal information will be kept in a locked file cabinet at the Fort Peck Community College Institutional Review Board administration office in Poplar. Neither Paula nor the rest of the research team, nor the community advisory board, will know what your individual responses to the survey are. The data collected in this study will not be associated with your name. The research team and the community advisory board will have access to the data collected for this project with no identifying information on it that can be associated with your name.

How am I informed about the results of the project, and when will they be released and presented to someone else?

We will publish the intervention results and make presentations on the results from We Are Here Now. Your identity will never appear in a publication or in print or be discussed at a presentation. In addition, you will have the opportunity to learn about the intervention results by contacting members of the research team, by attending community meetings where we share the results of the project, and through local (Fort Peck Reservation) media.

You have been chosen to participate in a Focus Group to help us understand the value and effectiveness of We Are Here Now because you are involved in the intervention as a youth participant in the schools, as a parent of a participant, or as someone who has been helping to facilitate We Are Here Now. We would like to better understand your point of view on what has worked best so far with We Are Here Now and what might be improved. Specifically, we would like to understand what experiences and activities you have liked or did not like, what educational information you liked or did not like, and any recommendations you might have for improving We Are Here Now.

Our discussions will be audiotaped and transcribed. These transcriptions are anonymous and confidential, and we will ask all participants to maintain confidentiality of discussions. However, we cannot guarantee full confidentiality because we cannot guarantee that participants involved in this Focus Group will not share stories or discussions outside our group. However, in transcriptions, no names will be used. There is no risk associated with your involvement in the discussions; and there is no cost to you for your participation in our discussions. You will receive $20 for your time.

We will publish the intervention results and make presentations on the results from We Are Here Now. Information from the project will also be posted on the U.S. website, <https://ClinicalTrials.gov>. Your identity will never appear in a publication or in print or be discussed at a presentation. In addition, you will have the opportunity to learn about the intervention results by contacting members of the research team, attending community meetings where we share the results of the project, and through your local community media.

What is this project about?

We Are Here Now is an intervention project with Fort Peck Community College and Montana State University. The purpose of this intervention is to teach youth at Fort Peck important things they need to know about sex so that they can stay healthy and not get a sexually transmitted disease, HIV, or Hepatitis C, and so that they can make healthy decisions about having children, getting pregnant, or getting someone pregnant. We Are Here Now also teaches Assiniboiné and Sioux youth about their culture and traditional beliefs and practices about what it means to be a young Native person who will soon be an adult. For the purpose of this interview we would like to learn from you how COVID-19 and the sheltering in place orders have impacted your behaviors.

Why me?

You have been selected to participate in this survey because you participate in the original data collection for We Are Here Now in Spring 2019. You may choose to participate or not participate at any time.

What happens to me if I decide to participate?

If you decide to participate in this interview we will ask you a series of questions about how COVID-19 and the sheltering in place orders impacted some of your behaviors and your feelings as well as your friends and family. The interview will take about 45 minutes. You will be asked several questions about different topics related to sex, your feelings and what you did during the sheltering in place orders from March 2020 to May 2020 and then, you will also be asked questions about what has happened in your life more recently. It is important that you know that all of your responses are anonymous. This means that no one will know that it is you who answered these questions. We will audio-tape and transcribe your interview. Your name will be nowhere in the transcript of your interview. If you agree to participate in this interview, you will receive a $10 gift card that you can use here at Fort Peck. If you would like a copy of your interview please let us know and we will make sure that you receive a copy of the transcript from our discussion.

What are the risks?

There may be minor risks to agreeing to participate in the interview. Some of the questions may make you feel uncomfortable, sad, or confused. You may choose to stop the interview at any time or decline to answer a particular question. The questions will be about your perceptions of what was going on in your life during the sheltering in place orders last Spring, from March 2020 to May 2020 and then now. None of the things that you say in the interview will be connected to your name. Although there are minor risks to agreeing to participate in the interview, if you feel sad or lonely or anxious you can talk to the person here today who is giving you this survey about how you are feeling and they can help you. You are also contact the names on this informed consent and we can assist you with finding someone to help you with how you are feeling.

What are the benefits?

The information gathered in this interview will help us understand how COVID-19 has impacted young people at Fort Peck so that we can help the Tribes, schools and other resources at Fort Peck you and your family now and in the future. We would also like you to know that if you tell us about any abusive situation you are experiencing or have experienced, we will need to report that to the appropriate services here at Fort Peck so that you can receive assistance.

Who gets access to information from this interview?

The research team has access to the data collected for this project. The We Are Here Now community advisory board will also have access to the data collected for this intervention. All responses on this survey will be anonymous. Neither the research team nor the community advisory board will know who you are and what your responses to the survey are.

How am I informed about the results of the project, and when will they be released and presented to someone else?

We will publish the results and make presentations on the results from this survey. Your identity will never appear in a publication or in print or be discussed at a presentation. In addition, you will have the opportunity to learn about the intervention results by contacting members of the research team, attending

Informed Consent to Participate in Human Subjects Research with Montana State University in Partnership with Fort Peck Community College

What is this project about?

We Are Here Now is an intervention project with Fort Peck Community College and Montana State University. NenUnkUmbi/EdaHiYedo* (“We are Here Now,” or N/E) derives from the Assiniboiné (NenUnkUmbi) and Sioux (EdaHiYedo) names for their traditional coming-of-age ceremonies. The purpose of this program is to teach youth at Fort Peck important things they need to know about sex so that they can stay healthy and not get a sexually transmitted disease, HIV, or Hepatitis C, and so that they can make healthy decisions about having children, getting pregnant, or getting someone pregnant. We Are Here Now also includes tribal elders and leaders teaching Assiniboiné and Sioux youth about their culture and traditional beliefs and practices about what it means to be a young Native person who will soon be an adult. In addition to working with youth, We Are Here Now also is offering education to parents/legal guardians about how to speak with their children about sensitive topics related to sex.

Why me?

You and your child have been invited to participate in We Are Here Now and to help gather information about the program and its effects. Your participation in this intervention is entirely voluntary. You can choose not to participate at any time. You and your child may withdraw from the intervention at any time without negative consequences. Your participation in We Are Here Now is your choice.

What happens to me if I decide to participate?

If you agree to participate in We Are Here Now, you will be with other guardians or parents of young people who are participating in We Are Here Now, and you will learn about how to talk with your child about sex. We Are Here Now is a project that educates youth and their guardians/parents about sexual and reproductive health. As a participant in We Are Here Now, you will be talking with other guardians/parents about healthy sexual behaviors and about how to talk with your children about sex. You will be asked to complete a survey specifically for guardians/parents about how you talk to your child about sex and what kinds of things about sex you speak with them about. There is no cost to you if you agree to participate in this study. You will receive an incentive of $20 for this first survey, and then $10 each time you attend the four Native Voices sessions (at 2 of these sessions you will again fill out the survey). Finally, you will receive a $25 incentive for completing the final survey after the end of the program.

What are the risks?

Some of the questions may make you feel a bit uncomfortable. For example, we will ask you about what kinds of sexual topics you talk about with your child. A list of community resources is provided with this informed consent if you feel you would like to speak with someone further about feelings that may have been brought up as a result of your participation in this study.

What are the benefits?

Through this program you will learn about ways to speak effectively with your child about sex and topics related to sexual health. The information gathered in this survey will help the intervention's research team and members of the Fort Peck community to understand what kind of impact your participation in We Are Here Now is having on your decisions to talk with your child about sensitive topics related to sex.

Who gets access to information from this interview?

All responses on this survey will be confidential. Only one person, Paula FireMoon, will know that you participated. Your personal information such as your name, telephone number and address will be linked to a study identification number to track your participation in the study. Your personal information will only be kept in order to contact you to participate in the follow up data collection for this study. Your personal information will be kept in a locked file cabinet at the Fort Peck Community College Institutional Review Board administration office in Poplar. Neither Paula nor the rest of the research team, nor the community advisory board, will know what your individual responses to the survey are. The data collected in this study will not be associated with your name. The research team and the community advisory board will have access to the data collected for this project with no identifying information on it that can be associated with your name.

How am I informed about the results of the project, and when will they be released and presented to someone else?

We will publish the intervention results and make presentations on the results from We Are Here Now. Your identity will never appear in a publication or in print or be discussed at a presentation. In addition, you will have the opportunity to learn about the intervention results by contacting members of the research team, by attending community meetings where we share the results of the project, and through local (Fort Peck Reservation) media.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Elizabeth Rink

FROM: Mark Quinn Mark Quinn
Chair, Institutional Review Board for the Protection of Human Subjects

DATE: November 6, 2020

SUBJECT: "Nen Ūnk?umbi/Edahiyedo ("We Are Here Now") - a Multi-level, Multi-component sexual and Reproductive Health Intervention for American Indian Youth - Pilot Study" [ER020518]

Thank you for submitting the follow-up report on the above research project. Reapproval of this project for an additional year will be reflected on the agenda of the next Institutional Review Board meeting. In the meantime, work on the project may continue. At the end of this approval period you will receive another follow-up form which will be used to evaluate this proposal for renewal. If the project extends beyond five years, you will need to submit a new application. Please keep track of the number of subjects who participate in the study and of any unexpected or adverse consequences of the research. If there are any adverse consequences, please report them to the committee within 3 calendar days. If there are serious adverse consequences, please suspend the research until the situation has been reviewed by the Institutional Review Board.

Any changes in the human subjects' aspects of the research should be approved by the committee before they are implemented.

It is the investigator's responsibility to inform subjects about the risks and benefits of the research. Although the subject's signing of the consent form, documents this process, you, as the investigator should be sure that the subject understands it. Please remember that subjects should receive a copy of the consent form and that you should keep a signed copy for your records.

In one year, you will be sent a questionnaire asking for information about the progress of the research. The information that you provide will be used to determine whether the committee will give continuing approval for another year. After initial approval, if the research is still in progress beyond a 5-year period, a completely new application will be required.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Elizabeth Rink, PhD, MSW

FROM: Robert McAnally, J.D.
Chairman, Institutional Review Board for the Protection of Human Subjects

DATE: November 1, 2023

RE: IRB Approval for the following: 1) Continued Data Analysis, 2) Continued Work with Community Advisory Board, 3) Design & Completion of "We Are Here Now" Tool Kit, 4) Implementation of Pilot Study that includes a Revised High School Survey, New Teacher Survey, and Revised Informed Consent Forms for Students and Parents, and New Informed Consent Forms for Teachers.

The Institutional Review Board has reviewed the above referenced requests and have officially granted approval on November 1, 2023.

As a reminder:

Please keep track of the number of subjects who participate in the study and of any unexpected or adverse consequences of the research. If there are any adverse consequences, please report them to the committee as soon as possible. If there are serious adverse consequences, please suspend research until the situation has been reviewed by the Institutional Review Board.

It is the investigator's responsibility to inform subjects about the risks and benefits of the research. Although the subjects' signing of the consent form, documents this process, you, as the investigator should be sure that the subject understands it. Please remember that subjects should receive a copy of the consent form and that you should keep a signed copy for your records.

Any future changes in the human subjects' aspects of the research will need approval by the Institutional Review Board before implementation.

The Fort Peck IRB requests that when you have a manuscript, thesis, or presentation prepared for public consumption, that you provide a copy to the Fort Peck IRB for prior approval. The IRB needs an opportunity to review the document pre-publication and may make recommendations to ensure the document appropriately respects the members of the Fort Peck Assiniboiné and Sioux Tribes.
