1. Introduction

1.1 Background

Vitiligo is an acquired depigmenting cutaneous disease with an incidence of 0.5 to 2% worldwide. It is characterised by white patches of skin resulting from the destruction of melanocytes from the epidermis (1). Although the exact cause of the condition remains to be established, autoimmunity is an important hypothesis of the aetiology of vitiligo. It has been demonstrated that CD8+ T-cells play a major role in the destruction of melanocytes, through the recognition of melanocyte differentiation antigens (2).

Genetic studies of vitiligo have greatly advanced understanding of the pathobiology of the condition and provided insights regarding to susceptibility to skin cancer. Genome-wide association analyses have found that vitiligo is associated with polymorphisms in the TYR gene, which codes for tyrosinase, the main enzyme in melanin synthesis. The TYR allele that is associated with susceptibility to vitiligo may confer a degree of protection against melanoma because of the anti-tyrosinase immunity (3). In addition, human leukocyte antigen A2 which is the risk allele for the development of vitiligo was found to be associated with regressing melanoma, supporting the inverse relationship between vitiligo and melanoma (4).

Although the genetic and autoimmunity profiles in vitiligo may protect against the development of melanoma and nonmelanoma skin cancers (NMSC), an absence of melanin in lesional skin and prolonged phototherapy treatment may cause concern about the development of skin cancer in this population (5). In a retrospective cohort study of 479 patients with vitiligo, an overall higher incidence of NMSC in the white vitiligo cohort than the white US rates was reported (6). This finding was supported by a recent, nationwide, control-matched cohort study conducted in Korea assessing 131,245 patients. The authors reported that, taking into account of the important cofounders (e.g. ultraviolet treatment), people with vitiligo were 3.4 and 1.3 times more likely to get melanoma and nonmelanoma skin cancer (NMSC), respectively, than those without vitiligo (7).

In contrast to the above-mentioned studies, Teulings and colleagues (8), in a large comparative cohort, Dutch, survey-based study in 2013, found a 3-fold lower probability of developing melanoma and NMSC in those with vitiligo. Stratification of the results into subgroups of patients treated with narrowband ultraviolet (UV) B, and psoralen and UV-A did not find increased lifetime prevalence of melanoma or NMSC. A subsequent study conducted in Italy by Paradisi and colleagues (9) also reported that patients with vitiligo had a significantly lower probability of developing melanoma or NMSC than those with a non-dermatological condition. However, a markedly higher risk (14.1% vs 3.2%) was noted in patients treated with phototherapy compared with the control group.

Overall, the risk of melanoma and NMSC in vitiligo is still being debated and further research is needed in this field.

1.2. Purposes of analyses

To the best of our knowledge, there have not been any large population-based studies in the UK assessing the incidence of melanoma and NMSC in patients with vitiligo compared with people without the condition. The purpose of this study is therefore to fill this data gap, and to examine whether the susceptibility to melanoma and NMSC may vary between different patient subgroups, e.g. ethnicity, those who undergo phototherapy or treatment with the new targeted biologic immunosuppressive therapies. Such new insights will be valuable for clinicians in advising patients with vitiligo on sun-related behaviour and treatment options in the UK.

2. Study objectives and endpoints

2.1 Study objectives

The overall purpose of this study is to examine whether the risk of skin cancer is higher in people diagnosed with vitiligo compared to people without vitiligo.

2.2 Primary objectives

- Describe the risk of new onset skin cancer in adults diagnosed with vitiligo in a contemporary real-world population compared with matched controls without vitiligo.
- Describe the risk of new onset skin cancer in adults diagnosed with vitiligo by sociodemographic subgroups.

2.3 Secondary objectives:

- Describe the prevalence of skin cancer in adults diagnosed with vitiligo compared with matched controls without vitiligo.
- Describe the prevalence of individual skin cancer types in adults diagnosed with vitiligo compared with matched controls without vitiligo.
- Describe the risk of new onset actinic keratoses (AK) in adults diagnosed with vitiligo compared with matched controls without vitiligo.
- Examine the prevalence of AK in adults diagnosed with vitiligo compared with matched controls without vitiligo.

2.4 Primary endpoint

- The skin cancer outcome comprises of the composite of melanoma and NMSC. NMSC comprises squamous cell carcinoma (SCC) and basal cell carcinoma (BCC). When more than one of melanoma, SCC and BCC occur, the skin cancer diagnosis date will be the earliest of these cancers.
- The primary endpoint is time to first diagnosis of new onset skin cancer during the study follow up period.

2.5 Secondary endpoints

- The prevalence (those diagnosed prior to the study period) of any skin cancer and each individual skin cancer in each study group.
- The secondary endpoint for new onset AK is the time to first diagnosis of AK during the study follow up period.

2.6 Other exploratory analyses

If there is sufficient information in the primary care record, we will examine the possibility of comparing the primary endpoints in those people with a documented history of immunotherapy use (compared the those without) and those people with a documented history of phototherapy treatment (compared the those without). Data on phototherapy treatment may be insufficient to enable comparisons, if this is the case, this will be reported as a limitation of the study.

3 General Study Design and Plan

3.1 Study Design

A matched-cohort design will be used to compare the risk of new onset skin cancers. The study will use a case-control design to compare the prevalence of skin cancers.

3.2 Data source and Read codes

This study will use routinely collected and collated data from the Optimum Patient Care Research Database (OPCRD). (10) This database incorporates pseudonymised primary care records from up to 700 GP practices distributed across England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. The current OPCRD cohort size is over 5 million actively registered people, and historic records available for 10.1 million people.

3.3 Data extraction

Individual patient data is anonymised at the point of data extraction. Queries will be executed to extract relevant data from the OPCRD using the Read code listed in Appendix 1. All data will remain in anonymised form and will be held on a secure server. The data will not be used for any purposes other than for the research which is described in the respective protocols and which has been approved by OPC. The sponsor, Pfizer Ltd, will not have access to the individual anonymised patient data.

3.4 Inclusion-Exclusion Criteria and General Study Population

Definition of vitiligo cases

We will identify all people diagnosed with vitiligo using diagnostic Read and SNOMED CT codes which are specific to vitiligo (Appendix 1). A diagnostic algorithm will be used to facilitate robust case identification of vitiligo. This algorithm will identify anyone with a vitiligo specific diagnosis code followed by exclusion of anyone with a diagnosis code for an alternative depigmenting disorder coded within a one-year period (six months before or after their first vitiligo diagnosis code). The list of alternative depigmenting disorders is shown in Appendix 2. We will include people diagnosed with vitiligo prior to the study period (referred to as prevalent vitiligo) and people newly diagnosed with vitiligo during the study period (referred to as incident vitiligo) as vitiligo cases for the risk of new onset of skin cancers analysis. Only people with incident vitiligo will be included as cases in prevalence analysis.

The study index date for people diagnosed with vitiligo will be the latest of; the start date of follow-up (1st Jan 2010), date of registration with GP plus six months, or the date of diagnosis of vitiligo.

3.5 Baseline characteristics

A fully list of the study variables is provided in Appendix 3. Sociodemographic groups will be defined by age category (18-44, 45-64,  $\geq 65$ ), sex, socio-economic status (SES), and ethnicity. SES will be defined using the official national deprivation measure; index of multiple deprivation (IMD).(11) This will be calculated at the point of data extraction, using patient postcode, with the resultant scores stratified by deprivation quintile according to the national distribution. Ethnicity will be grouped into major ethnic groups to be consistent with the UK official census categories: White, Black African/Caribbean, Asian, Mixed, and Other(12, 13). Other clinical covariates comprised BMI category, smoking status, alcohol use, and common comorbidities (hypertension, hyperlipidaemia, type 2 diabetes, atrial fibrillation, angina, myocardial infarction, stroke, heart failure, chronic kidney disease stages 3-5, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, asthma, chronic liver disease, and dementia). These will be identified using clinical codes and test results recorded in the patient record.

4 Sample size calculations

No previous UK population-based studies have examined skin cancer risk in people with vitiligo to provide an estimation of effect size to inform our sample size calculation. Assuming 80% power, a 1:1 ratio of vitiligo cases to controls, and an overall probability of melanoma over the study period of 0.45% (a conservative estimate based on a previous analysis of melanoma incidence in the general population (14)) a sample size of 6,177 will be required to detect a minimum clinically relevant effect size of a 80% decreased risk of melanoma in the vitiligo cohort compared to population controls. We anticipate c.22,500 people in our study cohort will be defined as vitiligo cases, these will be 1:1 matched to population controls providing a study cohort well in excess of this required sample size.

5 Populations to be analysed

5.1 Inclusion Criteria

All eligible adult patients (aged  $\geq 18$ ) registered with GP practices contributing data to OPCRd between January 1, 2010 and December 31, 2020, are eligible for inclusion in the study. People diagnosed with vitiligo prior to the study period (prevalent vitiligo) and people newly diagnosed with vitiligo during the study period (incident vitiligo) will be included as cases.

5.2 Exclusion Criteria

People actively registered with the GP practice at that date without a history of vitiligo require a minimum one-year registration with their GP practice.

5.3 Matching process

Each adult with vitiligo (prevalent or incident) will be 1:1 matched at their index date using, nearest neighbour matching (30) with an unaffected control (people without vitiligo prior to or during the study period). Matching variables will comprise age, sex, duration of practice registration and within primary care practice where numbers allow. After matching, the index date for each control will be set at the index date of their matched counterpart.

6 Statistical Analysis

6.1 Statistical principles

The mean, standard deviation (sd) and any other statistical measures, will be reported to one decimal place. Continuous data will be summarised in the form of means, sd, median, interquartile range (IQR) and range as appropriate. Categorical data will be summarised using frequencies and proportions. Chi-squared and t-tests will be performed to compare the frequency of dichotomous variables and the values of continuous variables where relevant. 95% CIs will be reported for main effect sizes. Statistical significance will be assessed using  $p < 0.05$ . Actual p-values will be reported except for p-values less than 3 decimal places which will be reported as “ $<0.001$ ”. P-values  $>0.1$  will be reported to one decimal place, p-values between 0.01 and 0.1 will be reported to 2 decimal places, and p-values between 0.001 and 0.01 will be reported to three decimal places.

The assessment of any associations with baseline characteristics and the primary endpoint will be assessed using Cox proportional hazards models. A standard set of features will be used in all multivariable models as listed in section 6.2.

Assumptions of statistical approaches will be assessed, and transformations used if necessary (although it is not anticipated that the data will violate model assumptions).

6.2 Primary Endpoint Analysis

Risk of new onset skin cancer will be assessed prospectively in vitiligo cases (prevalent and incident vitiligo, refer to section 3.4) and matched controls from the index date. Endpoints will be identified using the clinical codes described in Appendix 4. Only vitiligo cases where both the vitiligo case and their matched counterpart do not have skin cancer at their index date will be included. We will then estimate risk of skin cancer over the study period starting from the index date for both vitiligo cases and controls. The end of follow-up will be defined as the earliest of the study end-date (December 31, 2020), the date of patient transfer from an included general practice, date of death, or the date an individual first developed skin cancer. Risk of developing skin cancer will then be examined using time to failure analysis. Initially, unadjusted Cox proportional hazards models, stratified by matched set (vitiligo cases versus matched controls), will be used to provide overall hazard ratios (HRs) as summary estimates for the association of the presence of vitiligo with the time to skin cancer. Models will subsequently be adjusted for baseline sociodemographic, history of immunotherapy use or phototherapy treatment, prior vitiligo disease duration, and comorbidities (hypertension, hyperlipidaemia, type 2 diabetes, atrial fibrillation, angina, myocardial infarction, stroke, heart failure, chronic kidney disease stages 3-5, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, asthma, chronic liver disease, and dementia) in multivariable analysis.

This primary endpoint analysis will be repeated in sociodemographic subgroups defined by age, sex, SES and ethnicity.

6.3 Secondary Objective Analysis

Prevalence of skin cancer and each individual cancer type (melanoma, SCC, BCC and AK) will be examined in incident vitiligo cases (refer to section 3.4) and compared to matched controls without vitiligo. Prevalence will be estimated at the index date for both cases and matched controls.

Risk of new onset as described in the primary endpoint analysis will be repeated for each individual cancer type (melanoma, SCC, BCC and AK).

6.4 Sensitivity analysis

To evaluate the magnitude of potential bias from including, as matched controls, people who are registered with GP practices but who do not attend their practice, we also repeated the primary analysis including only controls with a least one primary care consultation in the year preceding their index date.

As part of developing the vitiligo case definition we will explore the numbers of people excluded by each alternative diagnosis. If an alternative diagnosis is found to be common and lead to exclusion of a large proportion of the potential cohort (e.g. >10%) then sensitivity analysis will be performed to identify any effect of removing that particular exclusion criteria on: 1) the study cohort demographics and 2) any associations with the outcome measures. These analyses may lead to an updated case definition which will be reported in full in the final project manuscript.

6.5 Missing data

This study will use the missing indicator variable method as missing data are considered likely not to be missing at random, meaning multiple imputation approaches will lack validity.

Patient will need to be excluded from analyses based on a matched design if they have incomplete data in the fields (age, sex) required to run the matching process. In similar studies, the exclusion rate due to incomplete data has been low (15, 16).

7 Study Limitations

Although the data is derived from a validated and nationally representative sample of the UK, results should not be extrapolated to dissimilar populations. Important limitations of the study include the reliance on comprehensive code lists to identify any given baseline or outcome variable. This limitation is common to all studies using routinely recorded data and will be mitigated through the use of a validated approach for defining baseline and outcome parameters. (17)

Limitations exist in the amount of clinical detail presently recorded in routine primary care electronic health records. Routine primary care databases offer the benefit of large cohorts at the expense of granularity; a limitation that is universal in epidemiological studies of this type. Some analyses will be restricted to people in whom complete information is available which may introduce selection bias as a result. Finally, the data presented will be observational in nature and although attempts will be made to reduce confounding by statistical adjustment where relevant, it is not possible to exclude the possibility of residual confounding as part of the explanation for any findings.

8 Statistical software

All statistical analyses will be performed using R software version 3.4.1.

9 Ethics

This study requires approval by the Anonymised Data Ethics Protocols and Transparency (ADEPT) Committee. It has been uploaded to ClinicalTrials.gov.

This study will be conducted in accordance with legal and regulatory requirements, as well as with scientific purpose, value, and rigor and follow generally accepted research practices described in Guidelines for Good Pharmacoepidemiology Practices (GPP) issued by the International Society for Pharmacoepidemiology (ISPE), and Good Epidemiological Practice (GEP) guidelines issued by the International Epidemiological Association (IEA). Study reporting will be conducted in accordance with the RECORD (Reporting of studies conducted using observational routinely collected data) guidelines.(18)

Appendix 2

Potential differential diagnoses for vitiligo which will be used as exclusion criteria if they appear as diagnoses in the medical record within six months of the initial diagnosis of vitiligo (six months before or after the vitiligo diagnosis). *As these conditions are extremely uncommon in the UK they will not be used in the exclusion process. Codes for these conditions are listed in Appendix 1.

Condition group	Conditions/causes included
Congenital and genetic hypomelanoses	Piebaldism Tuberous sclerosis Hypomelanosis of Ito Waardenburg syndrome Hermanski-Pudlak syndrome Griscelli syndrome Menkes syndrome
Post-inflammatory hypomelanoses	Post-inflammatory leukoderma including after Atopic eczema or Psoriasis Lichen planus Pityriasis alba Lichen sclerosus
Post traumatic leukoderma	Post traumatic leukoderma
Para-malignant hypomelanoses	Cutaneous T-cell lymphoma (mycosis fungoides) Melanoma associated depigmentation
Occupational/drug induced hypomelanoses	Occupational vitiligo Other induced hypomelanoses
Para-infectious hypopigmentation	Pityriasis versicolor (or tinea versicolor) Leprosy* Leishmaniasis*
Others	Melasma Morphoea Idiopathic guttate hypomelanosis Xeroderma pigmentosum Progressive macular hypomelanosis Nevus depigmentosus Cutaneous sarcoidosis

Appendix 3

Below is a list of the variables to be extracted and utilised for the study

Variable	Role	Data source(s)	Operational definition
Vitiligo	Case definition	OPCRD	As defined using the codes listed in Appendix 1
Vitiligo exclusion conditions	Case definition	OPCRD	As defined using the codes listed in Appendix 1 and summarised in Appendix 2
Melanoma	Study outcome	OPCRD	Identified using a expert review list of clinical diagnosis codes from the primary care record. Clinical codes listed in Appendix 4.
Squamous cell carcinoma (SCC)	Study outcome	OPCRD	Identified using a expert review list of clinical diagnosis codes from the primary care record. Clinical codes listed in Appendix 4.
Basal cell carcinoma (BCC)	Study outcome	OPCRD	Identified using a expert review list of clinical diagnosis codes from the primary care record. Clinical codes listed in Appendix 4.
Actinic keratoses (AK)	Study outcome	OPCRD	Identified using a expert review list of clinical diagnosis codes from the primary care record. Clinical codes listed in Appendix 4.
Age	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Defined as age at the start of follow up
Gender	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Primary care recorded patient gender

Socioeconomic status (SES)	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Defined using patient index of multiple deprivation quintile
Ethnicity	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Defined using office of national statistics census categories using clinically coded ethnicity data
Smoking status	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Using most recent clinically recorded smoking status information
Alcohol use	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Using most recent clinically recorded alcohol use status information
Body mass index (BMI)	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Defined using most recent clinically recorded BMI information
Death	Censoring event	OPCRD	Identified from coding in the clinical record
Deregistration from GP	Censoring event	OPCRD	Identified from coding in the clinical record
Atrial fibrillation	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
Angina	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
Myocardial infarction	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
Congestive heart failure	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
Stroke	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
Diabetes type	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
Hyperlipidaemia	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
Hypertension	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
Chronic kidney disease stages 3-5	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition and lab test results

Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease,	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
Asthma	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
Chronic liver disease	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
dementia	Baseline characteristic, predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using clinical codes for the condition
immunotherapy use	Potential predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using prescription records for immunotherapy
Phototherapy treatment	Potential predictor variable	OPCRD	Identified using prescription records and clinical codes for phototherapy
